DETROIT, June 27.—The Society of Naval Architects and Maine Engineers yesterday refused to enroll Noah, designer and navigator of the Ark, and Jonah, the first submarine navigator, as honorary members. It was the last session of the society's convention. There seemed to be some prejudice against Noah in the beginning. Professor H. S. Sadler, of the University of Michigan, was his only friend. "The Ark was constructed along perfect lines, involving the greatest amount of carrying space in proportion to its size of any ship ever float, since it is size of any ship ever float the greatest designer of us all, Moreover, his ship performed a greater service for mankind han any vessel or fleet of vessels that ever floated, not excepting Dewoy's fleet at Manila."

"This question has given gray hairs to a few German Biblical authorities, who have really tried to find out metruth about the Ark," volunteered Stevenson Taylor, designer of the Commonwealth, the finest and largest passenger vessel in the Atlantic coastwise "Taken Up, Dusted, Scoured and Stored."
